Amanda K. Allexon combines nearly a decade of service at the Federal Reserve Board and robust private practice experience to provide domestic and foreign financial institutions and investors with sophisticated, commercial advice on the full spectrum of transactional, governance, regulatory and supervisory matters, including complex high-profile mergers and acquisitions. She routinely represents clients before the Federal Reserve, the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and U.S. state banking regulators. She also advises on private equity investments involving banks and bank holding companies, and Volcker Rule issues.
